Did the AIO ship with Windows or did you buy a PC with no OS or with Ubuntu?

If the system came with Windows 10, then the digital key will already be installed on the motherboard and Windows should pick it up automatically. You will not be provided with any product key with your PC. So go into Settings (Windows icon > Gear Icon or Win+I) > Update & Security > Activation > Run Activation Troubleshooter. Check if this solves the problem. If not, go back to Settings > Update & Security > Windows Update and make sure Windows is up to date.

If this does not work for you, call Dell tech support. There is an obligation to serve your PC with a minimum of 1-year warranty even if you did not purchase any additional warranty at the time of purchase. If you are in the UK or some parts of Europe, the law states that they need to provide up to 2-years of support even if you do not purchase a warranty (only 1 free service in 2 years in the UK or some European countries). So call them and get the issue resolved. It is very unlikely that you will get a product key since Dell does not store any keys. You will be asked to reinstall Windows if remote troubleshooting does not work or may have a motherboard replacement (the motherboard will include a new digital key).

Windows 10 has fixed a loophole sooner or later (that was in the past versions of Windows) it's might be an effort to shove customers towards new hardware instead of allowing them to upgrade existing installations, though again, I am not sure the amount is sufficient to matter in either case. Microsoft has additionally plowed ahead with the thought of Windows-as-a-service, in a bid to convince customers that being upgraded towards the latest and finest is the easiest method to be.
